A Sense of Place

A collection of leather rugs designed by
Claesson Koivisto Rune

In an iconic image, late artist Joseph Beuys is seated in a sofa by his desk, speaking on his phone. The floor of the study is covered by whole leather hides, stitched together. To put leather on the floor seems at first like an odd thing. But when you think of it – it is in many ways the perfect material. Natural and durable, it looks good even after years of fierce use. Furthermore, it is a responsible use of what is in fact a by-product from the meat and dairy industry.

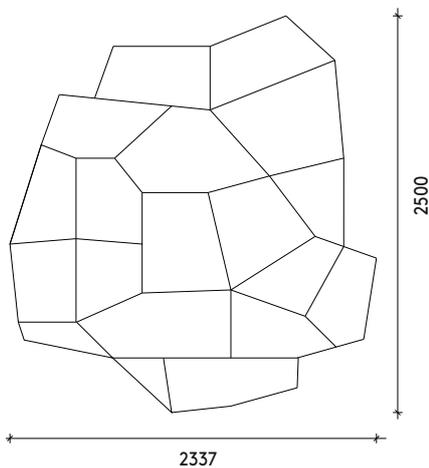

For their architectural project, the indie/jacobs gallery building, in Marfa, Texas, Claesson Koivisto Rune designed a rug. Inspired by heavy duty Texas work and farming gear, durable leather became the obvious choice. The design is now complemented with two more rugs forming a collection named A Sense of Place.

The collection is manufactured by Tärnsjö Tannery and all handmade in vegetable-tanned organic leather. All rugs are numbered edition. Available in various sizes and colours.

Via Appia

The great roman road Via Appia Antica connected Rome with southern Italy. It is still partially intact today, 2300 years after the first stretch was laid. Built as it is of solid blocks of stone, neatly fitted together. The rug is sized by adding or subtracting "blocks" to the pattern.

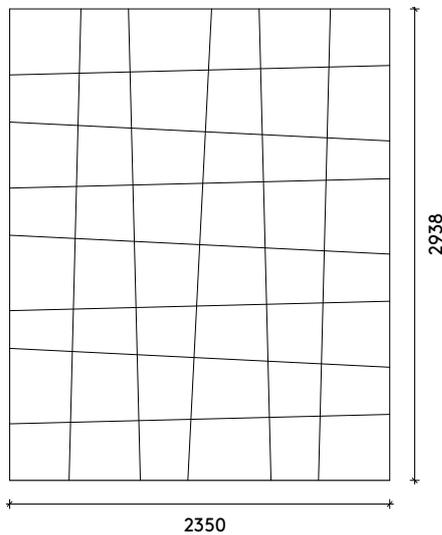

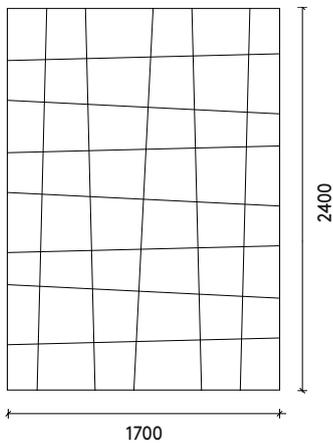

Marfa Crossroads

This carpet was initially designed for the inde/jacobs gallery building, in Marfa, Texas.

Saddles and boots have always been made of leather for its strength and wear resistance. How appropriate then to make a rug, that has to endure public openings and private parties, in that same material.

Midwest

The farmlands of the great American Midwest appear like endless man-made patterns, as seen from the airplane window. Growing fields in perfect lines. Each field with its own direction, every field next to the other.

Tärnsjö Tannery

Tärnsjö Tannery started in 1873 and has unsurpassed knowledge and experience in the art of vegetable tanning and saddlery. Every year they produce 900,000 square feet of the world's finest vegetable tanned leather, using hides from local Swedish farms. Roughly a third of their leather remains in-house and is used to produce Tärnsjö saddlery and other premium leather products for an elite list of clients including Our Legacy, Fredericia Furniture, Gant Rugger, Brooks of England and Smaller Objects. The work of this tannery produces an aesthetic that sets the standard for high quality leather all around the globe.

Tärnsjö Tannery is among the remaining 5% of tanning houses worldwide who still employ the tradition of vegetable tanning in favor of the more time and cost-efficient chrome excel method. They have chosen to respect the environment with business practices using bark extracts, water and water-based finishing. The fact that the resulting aesthetic is of unparalleled quality and beauty is a welcome and much cultivated benefit.
